

Dear FCC Commissioners:

I was able to view the broadcast of your proceedings held in Richmond, VA via C-SPAN 2. It was extremely interesting. I am both a citizen, and a consumer. I am concerned about the increasing amount of profanity, violence, sexually suggestive advertising, and programming that is on both network TV and cable. Has the standard for what is considered "decency" on the public airwaves been lowered without my knowledge. As a lack of discretion is shown on what is considered acceptable, our sensitivity to profanity, violence, and sexually acting out is decreasing. Then we wonder why our society is less civil, and young people aren't of the quality "when I was growing up". (I'm 43 years old, a Christian, and gainfully employed by a Fortune 500 corporation.) If changing the law will decrease the number of owners/competitors, and could result in more of what I'm seeing now, please don't.

Respectfully,
Roslyn R. Henderson
